Sharpsville Schools Rank With Best

VALUE OF EDUCATION WAS RECOGNIZED AT EARLY DAY IN SHARPSVILLE HISTORY

Great Progress Made Since 1802 When Miss Nancy Ameloth First Taught In the Old Sharpsburg School

Miss Nancy Ameloth, who in 1802 first taught in the old Sharpsburg school, is the first of a long line of teachers who have made great progress in the education of the children of this community. The value of education was recognized at an early day in the history of this town, and the people have ever since been anxious to provide the best possible facilities for their children.

The first school was built in 1802, and was a simple wooden building. It was located on the site of the present school building. The school was taught by Miss Nancy Ameloth, who was a Quaker. She taught for several years, and then was succeeded by other teachers.

As the years passed, the school building was enlarged and improved. In 1850, a new school building was built, and in 1880, another one was built. The present school building was built in 1910, and is a fine example of modern school architecture.

The progress made in the education of the children of this community is a credit to the people of this town. They have always been anxious to provide the best possible facilities for their children, and this is the result of their efforts.
